1. Background information

1.1 The United Nations Alliance of Civilizations

The UN Alliance of Civilizations seeks to reduce tensions across cultural divides that threaten to inflame existing political conflicts or trigger new ones. It works at grassroots level, promoting education, youth, media and migration projects aimed at building trust and respect among diverse communities.

The Alliance was established in 2005, at the initiative of the Secretary General of the United Nations. More details at www.unaoc.org

1.2 Fondazione CRT

Fondazione CRT originated in 1991 from privatisation of Torino Saving Bank during the transformation of the banking sector in Italy. It is a non-profit private legal entity, which focuses its resources and work in three main areas: Arts and Culture, Research and Education, Welfare and Environment. Committed to working in the Northwest of Italy, Fondazione CRT looks beyond the local area to national and international models and experience. It has diversified and perfected its way of operating, so as to better meet the needs of the community, through three different operational approaches which nowadays complement each other: the awarding of direct grants, the planning of its own projects and the venture philanthropy approach.

2. Entrepreneurs for Social Change

2.1 Context

Aspirations for dignity, democracy, human rights, freedom, as well as access to political, social and economic opportunities to improve lives and countries motivate today's generation of young leaders. This is true for all regions of the globe, but especially for the Euro-Mediterranean region, given recent events and the on-going economic crisis.

While it is difficult to assess the exact link between the wave of political change that affected some countries of the southern Mediterranean and the economic crisis, recent economic and employment data confirm that the situation across the entire region is extremely serious. The GDP growth of most countries in the region was halved between 2010 and 2014 and the unemployment rate in almost every country is in double figures.

The so-called Arab Spring and related social movements have brought to the surface aspirations for positive social change. This is particularly true for young adults who are even more affected by a lack of employment and opportunities for participation in their country's social development. However, in many countries the failure of these aspirations to translate into better socio-economic conditions have increased tensions between different communities and sometimes contributed to radicalization.

The typical responses to this situation tend to address intercultural and interreligious issues separately from economic issues. In reality, these issues are very closely related. Moreover, this interconnectedness is even more apparent in marginalized communities usually not reached by socio-economic development activities led by the national governments or the international community.

However, in the very recent past, the Mediterranean region provided a few outstanding examples of how the capacity to interpret the socio-cultural context or leverage it in a positive manner was a factor in the success of socio-economic development activities.

In this context, it is fundamental to give more room to activities that can address socio-economic conditions while allowing a new generation of Mediterranean youth to build bridges within their own country as well as across the sea.

2.2 Rationale

Keeping in mind that strong and inclusive socio-economic growth is an essential foundation for democratic and participatory government, the United Nations Alliance of Civilizations together with the Fondazione CRT and the Italian Ministry of Foreign Affairs created the first edition of Entrepreneurs for Social Change in 2013 with the desire to respond to the pressing and multi-dimensional needs of youth in an innovative and flexible way.

The target audience for this project are young people from communities struggling with tensions or marginalization linked to cultural and/or religious differences and at the start-up phase of their social enterprise which seeks to address these challenges.

The first two editions of Entrepreneurs for Social Change in 2013 and 2014 brought together 40 young entrepreneurs and 15 trainers and speakers from 26 different countries of the Euro-Mediterranean region. The participants were provided with a curriculum which focused on the skills and competencies required to leverage their social enterprises that address intercultural and interreligious issues in the region.

The training was followed by a mentoring period (6 months in 2013 and 9 months in 2014) during which the main trainers of the project closely followed the development of each social enterprise and provided insights and advice on how to further strengthen the business aspects of it.

In the context of Entrepreneurs for Social Change, we will use the following terms (our own definitions):

- Social entrepreneurship: approach that seeks to address a social issue building on effective for-profit business.
- Social enterprise: structured and sustainable entity (e.g. a cooperative, as opposed to a short-term project) which has positive social change as its primary goal and which exists with a profit motive. The success of a social enterprise is not measured simply in terms of profits or benefits for investors, but rather primarily in terms of evidence of positive social change.

2.3 Overall goal

Entrepreneurs for Social Change aims to bring together young social entrepreneurs from the Euro-Med region in order to take part in a targeted 8-day training that would increase the changes of their social enterprise to either leverage cultural and/or religious diversity in their community or address challenges related to this context, and, at the same time, generate employment.

In addition to this training function, the event would also allow young participants to exchange with their peers from other parts of the region regarding opportunities and challenges related to multicultural settings and to get in touch with potential investors.

After the initial training, networking and mentoring support would be provided to the young social entrepreneurs, thus building on the sustainability of the initiative.

2.4 The Training

A total of 20 participants from the Euro-Mediterranean region will be selected to take part into the 2015 edition of Entrepreneurs for Social Change. Regional and gender balance of participants will be included in the selection criteria.

The training portion of Entrepreneurs for Social Change will take place at the premises of Fondazione CRT in Torino (Italy), from 18th to 25th October 2015. For logistical reasons, successful applicants will be asked for their availability to arrive on 17th October and leave on 26th October 2015.

The training will focus on two main aspects of social entrepreneurship:

The business aspect, i.e. the framework of the social enterprise:

- creating a solid implementation plan;
- defining the target audience/clientele and finding the appropriate partners;
- being strategic and efficient in the search for funding / capitals;
- understanding the need to continuously network;
- ensuring sustainability of the social enterprise.

The social aspect, i.e. the content of the social enterprise:

- fully understanding the cultural and religious diversity of the context in which the social enterprise will be implemented;
- being strategic (finding a niche, responding to a need) in either leveraging this diversity or addressing challenges related to it;
- being equipped with the skills to prevent and address tensions or conflicts with links to cultural or religious diversity.

The methodology of the training will focus on applied work guided by experts (e.g. development of a concrete business plan) and include peer-assist sessions where participants help fellow participants to generate solutions to shared problems.

At the end of the training, participants will each receive technical support from a network composed of:

- Successful peers (other young social entrepreneurs) who would make themselves regularly available – via email – to help address challenges related to day-to-day implementation of their social enterprise;
- International mentors from the corporate sector that would brainstorm with the participants helping them to follow the strategic plan, matching them with potential investors and following the development of their ideas;

The successful applicants will be asked to participate in different surveys to monitor and evaluate the outcomes of the project throughout the process of training, mentoring and incubation.

The working language of the training is English. Translation in other languages will not be provided.

The program for the training will only be provided to participants.
